

Why Massage During Pregnancy?

Prenatal massage helps relieve stress, elevate mood, reduce muscular tension, stimulates peristaltic activity, reduce pain overall, increase venous and lymph circulation by normalizing blood pressure and reducing swelling. The powerful benefit of stress created through massage goes a long way to provide a calm, supportive and nurturing environment. As stress levels are decreased and comfort increases, an expectant mother can experience a happier, healthier and more enjoyable pregnancy!

Are There Times When Massage Should Be Avoided?

Massage should only be avoided if you are not feeling up to receiving touch. Total Women's Health has a massage therapist on staff who is certified in prenatal massage. If you do experience and concerns or discomfort at anytime you can consult with the doctor.

Receiving a massage in the first trimester is safe and can ease many of the aches and pains early in pregnancy. Massage will not cause a miscarriage. Causes of a potential miscarriage have no connection to receiving a massage, however a restorative massage can ease discomfort for a woman who has miscarried.

Massage For the Mind

Just as massage can ease the physical effects of pregnancy, it can also help with the emotional changes that occur during pregnancy and after childbirth. Women can experience a wide range of emotions before, during and after pregnancy. Massage therapists are sensitive and understanding to the spectrum of feelings an expecting woman may experience. In addition to alleviating your physical discomfort, your massage therapist is there to be supportive, reassuring and nonjudgmental of all you are going through. Prenatal massage can help a woman feel most comfortable within her pregnant body and ease the transition into motherhood.
